Spyridon Pilos studied mathematics at the university of Athens. He joined the European Commission as a translator in DGT where he also worked as administrator in the areas of statistics and digital content, before returning to DGT to head the language applications sector. This sector includes Euramis, the translation memory management system of the EU institutions, and MT@EC, the new machine translation service of the European Commission.